if the expansion of public education was the main event in the story of career choice in the nineteenth century, in the twentieth it was the growing number of women who entered the paid workforce.

The recovery in the second quarter wasn’t as reliant on consumption as we’d feared.